ENGLAND TRIED TO MAKE PEACE, IS STORY TOLD

Report That Overtures in the Spring of 1915 Is Circulated Among Disaffected Wing of German Socialists.

(Associated Press Correspondence.) Berlin, April 25.—The story of England made an offer of peace to Germany in the spring of 1915, which has for some time been persistently circulated by the disaffected wing of the socialist party, has at last been effectively exposed by the "Chemnitz Volksstimme," itself a leading socialist organ. Deputy Haase of Koenigsberg, head of the leading socialist faction in the reichstag, was sponsor for the story. According to the socialist newspaper of Koenigsberg he claimed to have proofs that England offered peace on condition that Germany made no annexations of territory, for which England in return would agree to cede some of its colonies to Germany and pay a war indemnity besides. This story was widely circulated, says the Koenigsberg newspaper, and caused much dissatisfaction in the socialist ranks, where it was felt that the government should have responded to the British overture.

The Chemnitz "Volksstimme" with an article captioned "Haase's War Hoax" now exposes the whole thing by setting some recent transactions in the budget committee of the reichstag. According to this organ this peace rumor was again mentioned at a meeting of the committee on March 29, 1916, by Herr Ledebour, a prominent socialist member, although Under-Secretary of State Zimmermann, of the foreign office, had assured the committee months ago that there was no truth in it. Ledebour asked Chancellor von Bethmann-Holweg why the English peace offers had been rejected. The chancellor replied that the statement was not true; he knew nothing about any English peace proposals.

Chancellor Absent.

Haase, who was present, prompted Ledebour vigorously; and the latter remarked further that the incident to which he referred took place at a time when the chancellor was absent from Berlin, and Under-Secretary of State Zimmermann could probably tell about it. Zimmermann thereupon denied energetically that any English peace negotiator had been turned away, and that for the very good reason that none had ever shown up. Then he went on to explain how the whole story started, in the following terms:

Professor Schuecking, a well-known German pacifist, had called upon him at the foreign office, said Zimmermann, and told him that he had been to Holland attending a meeting of the Anti-Orlog-Raad (anti-war council), where Under-Secretary Dreeschels, of the Dutch ministry of justice, had offered to come to Berlin as peace negotiator between Germany and England. Schuecking added that Dreeschels would not come as the official representative of the Dutch government, nor would he bring any proposals whatever from the British government; in other words he only wanted to hear Germany's proposals and then proceed to London to see what he could do there. Zimmermann answered that while he was of course willing to receive an agent holding a commission from responsible English statesmen of influential circles, he declined on his part to make peace proposals to England through a private person.

Plans Rejected.

Nevertheless, members of the Anti-Orlog-Raad went to England and had a conference with such peace friends as Burns, Trevelyan, MacDonald and others. When, however, the Dutch delegates put forth the view that England Germany could certainly begin negotiations upon a few concrete points like the Belgian problem, they met with a general rejection of their plans. John Burns, in particular, characterized it as an "impuudent imputation" that they should negotiate with Germany about Belgium; he said, was there could be no talk of negotiations until Germany had unconditionally evacuated Belgium and restored it as it was before the war. Zimmermann added that obviously no German could have anything more to do with such a matter.

Then, according to the Chemnitz "Volksstimme," Zimmermann added some remarks "which throw a glaring light upon the reckless doings of those around Haase." He said that he had heard that this Dreeschels affair was still being used in certain socialist circles as material for a demagogical agitation. For this reason he invited Haase to come to the foreign office and have a talk with him, frankly showed him all the correspondence and documents pertaining to the affair, and then asked him whether he saw anything blameworthy in Zimmermann's conduct, but Haase made no answer.

The Chemnitz "Volksstimme" concludes: "It is clear from all this that Haase had been fully informed in German official quarters as to the character of this chatter about a rejected offer of peace; nevertheless he continued his demagogical intrigues till he split the party in two. This swindle about an ostensible English peace offer has, of course, for all intelligent and decent men, been disposed of for good."

AMERICAN SUPPLIES IN DEMAND IN GREECE

(Associated Press Correspondence.) Athens, Greece, April 25.—The governmental committee which has been formed for the purpose of securing and distributing necessities of life, has, as its first act, sent a steamer to New York to obtain petroleum which, at the moment, is one of the things in greatest demand in Greece. The grain and flour dealers of the Piræus have petitioned the committee to take similar steps to obtain wheat from the United States.

The scarcity of sugar has become so serious that the committee is distributing it only on the presentation of sugar cards. Thus far the cards have been issued only to families and the confectioners and cafe proprietors are complaining bitterly. In many towns and cities there is absolutely no sugar to be had, which is particularly hard on the Greeks, whose principal amusement is sitting in front of a cafe half the night drinking coffee in which sugar is a principal ingredient.

Another item in the list of scarce articles is sulphate of copper which the vine growers need for spraying their vines, and which can no longer be obtained from England because of its use there in the manufacture of munitions.
